Ms. Friedman is a writer, lecturer, and teacher working at the intersection of health policy, ethics, and social issues. She is an Honorary Life Member of the American Hospital Association and the American Medical Association and one of the Boston University School of Public Health’s most honored teachers. For the past two years, she has been named one of the “Top Five” U.S. health care speakers by Speaking.com. She has written or edited several books on ethics and other topics and has made many television and radio appearances.

Ms. Friedman will address current, emerging, and eternal health care ethics issues. Organizational and individual ethical challenges and how to deal with them will be addressed. Interactive discussions will include analysis of issues and possible solutions, and case studies that require both thought and creativity. The special situation of those working in health care in Alaska, and ethics practice in the real world (as opposed to academic theory) will be woven into the discussions.

This is a historical period in health care, and that includes a shifting ethics landscape for the responsible professional. Come, learn, share and find solutions!
