

2016 CAPITOL CURRENTS

29th Alaska State Legislature ~ 2nd Session

Fourth Edition – 2/15 to 2/21/16

56 days to go

Alaska mourns the passing of Alaska Representative Max Gruenberg

Gov. Amended budget restores Best Beginnings, Parents as Teachers, Pre-K Education grants

HIGHLIGHTS

Max F. Gruenberg, Jr. was the senior member of the House. HR 6 was quickly transmitted to the governor. It dedicates in his honor the Capitol's House Judiciary Committee Room.

In her Annual address, US Senator Lisa Murkowski said that Congress reauthorized a new federal highway-spending bill that will bring over one-half billion dollars to Alaska for the next five years.

Next year, an additional $561 million is slated for the construction and maintenance of various military installations in Alaska.

Dept. of Natural Resources Commissioner Mark Myers has announced he's retiring March 1st. Deputy Commissioner Marty Rutherford will head the department on an acting basis.

The Lt. Governor has declined a request by Alaska Democrats to allow candidates not affiliated with a political party to run in the Democratic primary. State law requires a candidate seeking a party's nomination to be a registered voter of that party.

Alaska Native civil rights leader Elizabeth Peratrovich was honored at an event that featured Lt. Governor Mallott.

Most Alaskans are sold on the existence and seriousness of global warming, but far fewer are convinced it's caused by human activity, according to a recent poll.

A current senate bill prohibits the University of Alaska Board of Regents from abridging the right to keep and bear arms.

On the other hand, in the Capitol building visitors are greeted with a sign that says: "No weapons or firearms except law enforcement officers."

A project that aims to deliver high-speed Internet to Northern and Western Alaska will get underway this summer. Stretching from Prudhoe Bay to Nome, cable will be laid on the seafloor off Alaska's northern and western coasts.

This is the first leg in a broader plan to connect Asia and Europe via a fiber-optic cable that cuts through the Arctic Ocean.

BUDGET ISSUES

Use of Permanent Fund earnings to fill our multi-billion dollar budget gap will continue to be scrutinized by lawmakers. All of the proposals on the table are complex, and will require careful review to ensure the fund is protected for future generations.

Three major bills will be compared this coming week in House Finance. You may want to tune in, as it should be very informative.

Brewers, bar owners, restaurant owners, distillers, bartenders and distributors showed a popular opposition front as the Alaska Senate's Labor and Commerce Committee took public testimony on a bill to double the state's alcohol taxes.

A proposal to make Alaska's tobacco taxes the fifth highest in the United States met a mixed reception from the Senate Labor and Commerce Committee as SB 131 received its first look.

The new implementation of a system that distributes court documents through emails to Alaska lawyers and other agencies will serve as a bridge to the state court system's digital future -- and hopefully save money along the way.

HEALTH & SOCIAL SERVICES ISSUES

A surprising spike in the number of Alaska children in foster care appears rooted both in a heroin epidemic and a more aggressive response by the Alaska Office of Children's Services to reports of endangered children.

SB 179 was introduced this past week requiring doctors to determine whether a fetus could survive outside the womb before performing an abortion.

The bill also would add viable fetuses to the state's Child in Need of Aid (CINA) laws and allow them to be surrendered to the doctor or hospital employees if the woman is not willing or able to care for the child.

PUBLIC SAFETY ISSUES

Alaska has a rape problem. According to the FBI's 2014 Crime in the United States report, Alaska reported an average of 104.7 rapes per 100,000 inhabitants, nearly three times the national average.

In a new report, the Department of Corrections says it needs more than 100 new employees to function properly, but doesn't have the budget to support even a modest addition.

Alaskans will be able to fill out applications for the first commercial marijuana licenses beginning on Feb. 24th. The state will use the Internet to track where marijuana is grown, processed, and sold so people will only be able to apply online.

The amended FY17 budget restores one trooper position for drug investigation and enforcement.

For the first one-year period on record - Oct. 1, 2014, through the end of September 2015 - the Coast Guard recorded zero operations-related commercial fishing fatalities in Alaska.

Through much of the 1980s, an average of 31 fishermen died in Alaska each year, according to a federal report.

NATURAL RESOURCES

A lack of progress between the state's producer partners on major Alaska LNG Project agreements may throw things off schedule. They continue to face low oil prices that challenge bottom lines.

This past week, John Sturgeon testified before the Senate Resources Committee. He is an Alaskan hunter arguing a state's rights case before the U.S. Supreme Court – all navigable rivers within national parks in Alaska are state-owned lands and not subject to federal enforcement.

GOVERNOR'S CORNER

<http://gov.alaska.gov>

Governor Bill Walker ordered all Alaska state flags to be lowered in honor of Representative Max Gruenberg who passed away last Sunday Feb. 14th.

This order ran concurrently with the previous order for U.S. Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia.

IMPORTANT DATES

Feb. 29th – Senator Dan Sullivan will give his Annual Address before the Legislature.

March 8th – Nominations deadline for the 2016 Alaska First Lady's Volunteer of the Year Awards.
